

Floating World

Japanese woodblock prints, 1780–1850 · Exhibition leaflet

Floating World brought together forty prints from the decades when Edo's publishers sold pictures of actors, poets, rain and waves to anyone with a few coins. Each sheet was cut on cherry wood by one hand, inked by another and printed by a third.

In the exhibition

- The Great Wave and two other views of the coast
- Surimono: privately printed greetings with poems, made in small runs
- Night rain at a riverside shrine
- A wall of the tools: knives, a baren, brushes and a cut block

Around the exhibition

A gallery talk every Saturday at 11, a woodcut workshop for adults on Thursday evenings, and a reading corner with books from the shop.

Entry to the exhibition is free. Members are invited to the closing evening.
